MAKHAM versus SABSE

It is the type of feeling that all of us have had at one time or another. You get up in the morning. Have your breakfast. Yet you somehow feel uneasy. And all day long things go wrong. You miss the train at the station. When you get the next train you have to stand all through the trip. When you get off from the train you accidently brush up against another man. And that almost turns into a fight. When you get to the office you find your secretary is ill at home. You can't find an important document. You begin to get a big headache. And when you want to go down for lunch you learn the elevator isn't working. By the time you reach home exhausted you do remark:

"This certainly was my unlucky day. If I were superstitious I'd think some evil spirit was after me."

How about reversing the situation? One of those days that everything goes fine. Even better than that. You don't have to take the train. Your friend Bill sees you and drives you to the city. You get to the office. The boss wants to see you. He is giving you an important assignment and a raise. Your friend Tom gives you two tickets for next week to see a big musical. You have a feeling that your lucky day is this one. And when you get home you learn the news. Seems the raffle ticket you bought was a winner. You remark as you sit in an easy chair:

"This certainly was my lucky day. If I were superstitious I'd think some guardian spirit was looking after me."

It could be possible that invisible spirits are all around us. Some of them are good and want to help us. Others represent evil and want to harm us. Before you smile at this idea, just remember that there are a lot of people who do believe in this idea. What you are now going to read is part of a tape recording made by Professor John Hanson. The translation was made by Dr. Saf Thanda. The words in the original were those of Vasani Hal. He is what is known in his country as a "Holy Man." He lives in a cave. So that might make him a hermit. He seems to be ageless. People visit him for advice. They bring him food and other gifts. Here are some of his ideas via the translated tape:

"We in the East do not think nor live the way you do in your western civilization. We know that there is a constant battle between Makham the Spirit of Good and Sabse the Spirit of Evil. Each is fighting for the domination of mankind. Each man has a soul or Kirma. This is what the spirits wish to have. If they can get the soul of a man then they can control that man.

Many centuies ago Makham and Sabse had a fight in the Valley of Pichale. It was a terrible combat. And it lasted for more than three months. During that time villages were destroyed. Famine, Fire, and Flood came over the earth. It seemed as though all living creatures would be destroyed. The fight finally ended in a draw. But it has been continued all through the centuries and even in the present day.

Even in your western civilization you have people who still purchase charms. Why? Because there is an inward feeling that these charms will help to ward off the influence of the evil invisible creatures that surround us. You also have a very important word in your English language. It is called: Temptation. You say that a man was tempted to steal money. What tempted him? In fact, who tempted him? We would merely say that it was Sabse who tempted him. But man has a will. He must resist temptation. He must fight evil.

I have a gift of the Gods. For there are times when I can clearly see these spirits. To my eyes they no longer are invisible, and yet I know that to all of mankind they remain outside of his actual world. You in your country must get the people to see that Makham and Sabse are still fighting. And whenever you have that uneasy feeling grasping you, it is a signal that Sabse and his cohorts are around you. But you must have courage. For Makham and his good spirits are there to try to protect you

I know that there are special times when Sabse will take a human form to deceive some person. But fear not, for then Makham also does the same. To try to save that person from being deceived. I know not when this struggle will end. Perhaps it will continue as long as there are people alive on this earth. But beware! When you have that uneasy feeling you should know that Sabse is in the vicinity."
